 and where the substrate combine with the enzyme and when the enzyme changes shape and won't work anymore.

LTIV Describe the biological significance of enzymes (10/16)

Conclusion

XS Comar Puente 5th

In part B the substrate goes through hydrolysis and stores two products. In part C the two substrates go through dehydration synthesis and combine to make the product. When enzymes got too hot or cold they denature and can't do their job any more. Because the enzymes start to denature and can't function anymore, I learned that they can denature when the temperature changes too much, they end in use and they can only break down their corresponding substrate.
